➤ Explanation of 1930

- In India, "1930" is a helpline number designated for the Crime Investigation Department (CID) in various states. It serves as a crucial point of contact for individuals to report crimes, seek assistance, or provide information related to criminal activities. Here's a detailed explanation of how the "1930" helpline operates within CID:
- Centralized Contact Point: "1930" serves as a centralized helpline number that individuals can dial to reach CID in their respective states. This helpline is accessible to the general public, making it easier for people to report crimes or seek assistance from law enforcement authorities.
- 24/7 Availability: The "1930" helpline is typically operational 24 hours a day, seven days a week, ensuring that individuals can reach CID at any time, including during emergencies or outside regular business hours.
- Trained Personnel: The helpline is staffed by trained personnel who are equipped to handle a variety of situations. These individuals are trained to assess the nature of the caller's concern, gather relevant information, and provide appropriate assistance or guidance.
- Reporting Crimes: One of the primary functions of the "1930" helpline is to allow individuals to report crimes to CID. Callers can provide details about the incident, such as the nature of the crime, location, and any other relevant information that may assist investigators in taking appropriate action.
- Seeking Assistance: The helpline is also available for individuals who require assistance from CID for various reasons. This may include seeking guidance on legal matters, reporting suspicious activities, requesting police intervention, or seeking support for victims of crimes.
- Initiating Investigations: Based on the information provided by callers, CID personnel can initiate investigations into reported crimes. This may involve dispatching law enforcement officers to the scene, collecting evidence, interviewing witnesses, and taking other necessary steps to investigate the matter further.
- Providing Support and Guidance: In addition to initiating investigations, CID personnel can provide support and guidance to callers. This may include advising callers on their rights, explaining legal procedures, providing information about victim support services, and offering assistance in navigating the criminal justice system.
- Maintaining Confidentiality: CID ensures the confidentiality of information provided by callers to the "1930" helpline. Callers can report crimes or provide information anonymously if they choose, and CID takes measures to safeguard the privacy and security of individuals who contact the helpline.
- Overall, the "1930" helpline serves as an essential resource for individuals seeking assistance from CID in matters related to criminal activities. It plays a vital role in facilitating communication between the public and law enforcement authorities,
